

Speaker 1: I have represented individuals charged with variety of white-collar crimes including conspiracy-type offenses, wire fraud offenses and just general theft, mail fraud offenses. The biggest difficulty with those white-collar crime cases is really playing catch-up, trying to learn as much about, what is taking place in a shorter period of time is critical when representing any sort of individual or company that is charged with a white-collar offense. The government again usually has been looking at someone for a long time and you need someone that's going to really be able to get their hands dirty going through lot of documents, talking with lot of witnesses to find out as much as possible, so that I can properly represent the client.
